The present sequence represents the amino acid sequence from the large open reading frame of p3cGS-5 cDNA bovine adrenal cortex clone insert. The presence of 36 acenosine residues at the 3'-end of the cDNA preceded by a transcription termination consensus sequence suggests that all of the 3' untranslated sequence of the cyclic-GMP-stimulated by phosphodisererase (GGS-PDE) mRNA is represented by this clone. The DNA sequences of the GGS-PDE's are used for the production of the recombinant serzymes, which in turn may be used for antibody production and to screen for compounds that modulate phosphodisererase activity. The specification also describes Ca2+/calmodulin sensitive cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase (Cam-PDE) enzymes. CaM-PDE enzymes catalyse the hydrolysis of cyclic nucleotides and as such control their intracellular level. They are controlled by second messengers e.g. Ca2+ and calmodulin and transmembrane signals and through pathways involving these, regulate flow of information from extracellular hormones, neurotransmitters and other signals using cyclic nucleotides as messengers. The specification describes an assay for identifying a chemical agent which modifies the enzymatic activity of a mammalian CaM-PDE. The assays are useful for identifying modulators of CAM-PDE with the suspected modulator and measuring cells expressing CAM-PDE with the suspected modulator and measuring its effect e.g. monitoring the hydrolysis of cAMP and/or CGMP

The recombinant proteins and fragments produced can be used for therapeutic, diagnostic, and prognostic purposes and will provide the basis for preparation of monoclonal and polyclonal antibodies. An antibody specific for the Ca2+/calmodulin-stimulated cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase (PDE) polypeptide is useful for affinity purification or detection of the polypeptide and is selective only for the Ca2+/calmodulin stimulated cyclic nucleotide PDE polypeptide

The specification describes calcium ion/calmodulin stimulated cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterases (CaM-PDEs). CaM-PDEs are characterised by their responsiveness to intracellular calcium, which leads to a decreased intracellular concentration of cAMP and/or cGMP. CaM-PDEs, and their fragments or synthetic peptides, are used in therapy, prognosis and diagnosis. They are also used to generate specific antibodies useful as immunoassay reagents for detecting the protein or for affinity purification and for identifying specific modulators of CaM-PDE activity. CaM-PDEs are implicated in signalling involving extracellular hormones and neurotransmitters, so selective inhibitors are potentially useful as cardiotonic, antidepressant, antihypertensive and antithrombotic agents cincoding mammalian Ca2+/Calmodulin-stimulated phosphodiesterases (CaM-PDES) and cyclic guanidine monophosphare (CGMP)-stimulated phosphodiesterases (CGS-PDES). In particular the invention relates to an assay for identifying chemicals that modify the enzymatic activity of a mammalian cGS-PDE. The PDES catalyse the hydrolysis of of cyclic nucleotides to their corresponding 5'-nucleoside monophosphates. In this way they control the cellular concentration of cyclic nucleotides.

Conclections to their corresponding 5'-nucleoside monophosphates. In this way they control the cellular concentration of cyclic nucleotides of neurotransmitters or other signals that use cyclic nucleotides as neurotransmitters or other signals that use cyclic nucleotides as nessengers. The PDES in turn are regulated by transmembrane signals or econd messenger ligands such as Ca2+ or cGMP. Inhibitors of these enzymes are potentially useful as cardiotonics, antidepressants, antidhypertensives or antithrombocics. The method of the invention can identify specific inhibitors of particular isoforms of CGS-PDES.

Also included are a DNA vector comprising the novel DNA sequence, a host cell transformed with the polynucleotide sequence, a polypeptide product of the expression in the transformed host cell, an antibody specifically immunoreactive with the polypeptide and assay methods for identifying a chemical agent which modifies the enzymatic activity of a mammalian CaMP-DB or CGS-PDB. Disclosed are the cDNA and protein sequences of bovine 59KDa CaM-DDB, GBS-DBB. The DNA sequence is useful for producing a polypeptide having the enzymatic activity of a mammalian CaM-PDB and cGS-PDB. The DNA sequence is useful for producing a polypeptide having the enzymatic activity of a mammalian CaM-PDB or cGS-PDB which is

The invention is useful for producing a polypeptide having enzymatic activity of mammalian CaM-PDE and cGS-PDE. The invention is also useful for identifying a chemical agent that modifies the enzymatic activity of mammalian CaM-PDE agent that modifies the enzymatic activity of mammalian CaM-PDE and cGS-PDE. An unamplified bovine adrenal cortex cDNA library was prepd. and screened with redundant 23-mer antisense oligonucleotide probes end labelled with radiolabelled ATP and T4 polynucleotide kinase. A single 2.1 kb cDNA clone (designated pcGS-3:2.1) was obtd. This clone was used to screen a second, amplified bovine adrenal cortex cDNA library to yield 52 putative clones. The largest insert was of 4.2 kb in a plasmid designated p3CGS-5. The cDNA encodes a 921 residue protein with mol. wt. 103 kD. (Updated on 25-MAR-2003 to correct PN field.)

Bukaryotic cells that express CaM PDE can be used to screen cpds. for the ability modulate CaM PDE activity. CaM PDEs are involved in regulating the transmission of information from hormones, neurotransmitters or other systems that use cyclic nucleotides as messengers. Antibodies raised

This sequence is nearly identical to the bovine adrenal gland cGS-PDE isozyme. The cyclic cucleotide phosphodiesterases (PDES) catalyse the hydrolysis of 3', 5' cyclic nucleotide phosphosphates. The PDES are therefore important in the control of the cellular concentration of cyclic nucleotides. The PDES are therefore important in the control of the cellular concentration of cyclic nucleotides. The PDES are, in turn, regulated by transmembrane signals or second messenger core in regulating the flow of information from extracellular hormones, neurotransmitters, or other signals that use the cyclic nucleotides as messengers. PDES are present in most of the cells and tissues of messengers. PDES are present in most of the cells and tissues of cukaryotic organisms, but only in trace amounts. cGS-PDEs are stimulated by commonstalytic cGMP-specific site present on the cGS-PDE. The DNA encoding this sequence can be used for the production of recombinant cGS-PDE, which may have therapeutic and diagnostic uses. This sequence may also be currect PF field.)

The large open reading frame encodes a 942-residue polypeptide that is nearly identical to the adrenal gland cyclic-GMP-stimulated phosphodiesterase (GGS-PDE) isozyme. The difference in the primary structure of the two isozymes lies in the amino-terminal residues 1-46 of the brain cGS-PDE, and residues 1-25 of the adrenal cGS-PDE. The remaining carboxy-terminal residues in both are identical. The DNA sequences of the cGS-PDE's are used for the production of the recombinant enzymes, which in turn may be used for antibody production and to screen for compounds that modulate phosphodiesterase activity. monophosphate-stimulated phosphodiesterase (cGS-PDE) cDNA. The specification also describes Ca2+/calmodulin sensitive cyclic nucleotide phosphodiesterase (Cam-PDE) enzymes. Cam-PDE argymes catalyse the hyposphodiesterase (Cam-PDE) enzymes as as used catalyse the hydrolysis of cyclic nucleotides and as such control their intracellular level. They are controlled by second messengers e.g. Ca2+ and calmodulin and transmembrane signals and through pathways involving these, regulate flow of information from extracellular hormones, neurotransmitters and other signals using cyclic nucleotides as messengers. The specification describes an assay for identifying a chemical agent which modifies the argymatic activity of a mammalian CaM-PDE. The assays are useful for identifying modulators of CaM-PDEs. The assays are useful for incubating cells expressing CaM-PDE with the suspected modulator and messuring its effect e.g. monitoring the hydrolysis of CAMP and/or CGMP

The phosphodiseterases were used to transform host cells, preferably mammalian or yeast cells. The recombinant proteins and fragments produced can be used for therapeutic, diagnostic, and prognostic purposes and will provide the basis for preparation of monoclonal and polyclonal antibodies. An antibody specific for the cat, foalmodulin-stimulated cyclic nucleotide phosphodiseterase (PDE) polypeptide is useful for affinity purification or detection of the plypeptide and is selective only for the Ca2+/calmodulin stimulated cyclic nucleotide PDE polypeptide.
